

Preliminary Preparations

The tables are set up in the shape of a horseshoe, or inverted U. The Worshipful Master is placed in the East, facing the middle of the table, with the Chaplain at his right hand and the Wardens at the two ends of the tables in the West. The table lodge should be held in the banquet hall and should be tyled as securely as the lodge room. The Worshipful Master and Wardens should have their gavels and columns.

All that constitutes the table service should be set in three parallel lines. The plates, knives, forks, spoons, and napkins form the first line. The fruit juice, water glass, coffee cup and firing glass for each person should form the second line. The third line might be composed of such items as individual fruit cocktail and salad dishes, candles, salt and pepper shakers, etc.

The Stewards of the lodge (with helpers) are responsible for charging the cannons prior to each toast and the wind or beverage containers are not to be left on the tables between toasts.

A full course meal is to be served with this table lodge.

W.M.(*)

W.M. Brother Director of Ceremonies, would you please educate us on our duties this evening?

D.C.: Brethren, this table lodge is not to be construed as part of our ritual, but only as exemplification of what is held in other states, and countries. It is, however, just as solemn and binding an occasion as it is to our brethren in our sister jurisdictions. Our Freemasonry in America came from England and frequently it has been suggested that our craft would renew its strength if it reverted to some of the English practices.

A toast at the festive board of an English Lodge can take many forms. It can be short, long, poetic, or prosaic, humorous or serious--but always in good taste. When a toast is to be proposed, I will first ring the bell, and the gavels in the East, West and South will sound to alarm the Brethren, and you will act accordingly. At the appropriate time, you will unite with the one proposing the toast in the proper prescribed manner. Inter-spaced between the various toast will be responses and/or short talks, and close attention is requested. Between each of the toasts will be one course of the meal.

(The glass is brought to the second position in unison with the Worshipful Master, the glass is brought to the left breast, then to the right breast, then again to the second position so that the movement makes a triangle. This triangle is made three times: then the glass is brought to the table in three moves- it is first carried a little to the left, then to the right, and finally forcibly in unison to the table.)
